Hello Zukiswa,

I liked how you included an image of the CUE model in your post to demonstrate your suggested changes to the CUE model.

There was a minor error in the first inline reference for Michael Minge and Manfred Thüring's study as the authors surnames should be included in the inline reference not just the year the study was published. In order to prevent this from happening again in future assignments I would suggest double checking your references prior to submitting any work to ensure there are no errors when referencing academic sources.

I would have liked to have seen additional references not just Michael Minge and Manfred Thüring's study to show you have done additional research into the factors affecting user experience.

A critic I would have of your post is your suggestion of incorporating BDD and secure coding in the SDLC is what Andrius suggested who posted their initial post two weeks prior. If you are going to use other students' ideas for inspiration when writing your initial post, you must reference them otherwise this could be considered plagiarism. I would suggest familiarising yourself with the plagiarism guide from the university.

I also believe the structure of your initial post could be improved as your missing headers

Best Regards,

Sam
